

SEIZE LIQUOR AND CAR; MAN HELD IN JAIL

Arrested After Chase By Borough Po- licemen; Many Charges Pre- ferred.

While waiting for a customer in Race Horse alley behind the Hoffman hotel, according to police reports, James Lunsford, 23, Gettysburg R. 8, was arrested by Officers George Aughinbaugh and Paul Shealer, Saturday evening at 7 o'clock.

Lunsford was committed to the Adams county jail, charged with the illegal possession and transportation of intoxicating liquor, driving a motor vehicle without an operator's license and operating a car with license plates other than those issued for it. Bail has been set at $2,000 for a preliminary hearing.

According to the police, Lunsford and a companion, who escaped before the officers made the arrest, tried to sell the liquor at several places here Saturday afternoon, but had met with little success. When officers searched the car, they found two gallons of alleged moonshine liquor in three containers.

May Link Brother-in-Law
Lunsford told the officers he had secured the liquor from "a man in Midway" but police doubt that story. Lunsford, a Virginian, has been living with his brother-in-law, Paul E. Ginter, near Bonneauville, for some time, and police expressed the belief that Ginter is implicated. In court here two years ago, Ginter was sentenced to serve one year in jail and pay a fine of $300 for violation of the liquor laws.

A driver's card and a title card in the automobile showed that the machine was owned by Ginter, police said. The machine, a ramshackle touring car, was confiscated by the officers.

The men, working toward Gettysburg, affixed 180 signs to posts already placed by 6:30 o'clock this morning. The signs, octagonal in shape, bear the words "Thru Traffic Stop" and are placed near the intersections of roads crossing the two main highways.

PLAYWRIGHT IS DROWNED

Avery Hopwood Dies While Bathing at French Beach; Wrote "The Bat."

Paris, July 2.—Avery Hopwood, the American playwright, was drowned at St. Juan les Pins at 8 p. m. last night while bathing with a party of friends.

Hopwood arrived here recently from New York and had intended sailing for America next week.

He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, May 28, 1884. He went to New York in 1905 and acted as special correspondent for the Cleveland Leader.

Hopwood's first play, "Clothes," written in collaboration with Channing Pollock sold almost immediately and thereafter he marketed numerous plays in the United States and Canada and many of them were reproduced in Europe and the Orient.

He was a member of the Author's League of America, The American Society of Dramatists, and also belonged to the Lambs club, the University of Michigan club and The Coffee house.

Hopwood collaborated with Mary Roberts Rhinehart in writing three plays, "Seven Days," "The Bat," and "Spanish Love," and with David Gray in the production of "The Best People."

DECIDE AGAINST BOND REISSUE

Supreme Court Decides Road Bonds Are Not A Perpetual Issue.

Philadelphia, July 2.—(AP)—The state supreme court today decided that the $50,000,000 road bond issue authorized in the state constitution is not a perpetual debt.

The court affirmed the Dauphin county court which enjoined the auditor general and state treasurer from issuing $3,000,000 bonds for road improvements.

It was a test case to obtain the interpretation of the state's highest court as to the meaning of the constitutional provision governing increased indebtedness for road purposes.

In some quarters it had been contended that under the provision authorizing the state to increase its indebtedness for road purposes, bonds issued and retired could be reissued so long as the indebtedness did not exceed the amount authorized. In order to obtain a judicial interpretation the governor directed the state fiscal officers to reissue $3,000,000 of the bonds.

"Before taking your wonderful and decided to give it a trial. After taking two bottles of this tonic my condition improved greatly and I am so glad of this change that I am anxious to tell other sufferers of the merits of this wonderful tonic. I no longer have dizzy spells and headaches and the pains in my back have entirely disappeared. Since taking this medicine I can work without feeling anything awful at times. After eating a meal I would fill up with gas and the indigestion pains would be so severe I could hardly bear them. My condition became generally rundown, due to the hard work a person must do on a farm and I had almost given up hope of ever getting any relief."

How Berlin welcomed Bremen Fliers

It was lucky for the crew of the plane Bremen, Koch, Von Huensfeld and Fitzmaurice, that they had received good training while in America in being received. Their welcome on their arrival at Tempel Hop field near Berlin was nothing short of riotous as this photo well illustrates.

"GLORIOUS BETSY," starring Dolores Costello, is a Warner Bros. picture of this novel. Based on the play by Rida Johnson Young.

SYNOPSIS

Captain Jerome Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon, falls in love with the beautiful Betsy Patterson on a visit to America. Against the advice of his suite he marries her. They sail for France to brave the anger of the Emperor. Betsy is refused permission to land and while Jerome is about to leave the ship to plead once with his brother a small tug comes alongside. The Emperor has come in person to command Betsy to give up Jerome. Napoleon tells her of his ambitious plans for Jerome's future which will be ruined unless she renounces him. Betsy begs Napoleon to listen to her.

"Mademoiselle, I always listen to a pretty woman, but I never hear what she says. It is too dangerous," Napoleon bowed.

"When you were created, Sir, your heart was forgotten," Betsy returned, her anger roused.

"Ah, no, simply suppressed," Napoleon retorted. Then he became serious. "If my brother persists in his determination to remain with you, you will have attained your heart's desire. Have you, however, counted the cost to him?"

"The cost!" Betsy looked at the Emperor, her forehead wrinkled in a puzzled frown.

"Ay, a passion like yours which sets all the universe on one side and the beloved object as the other is debased, selfish and despicable," Napoleon told her in no uncertain terms.

She looked up at him pathetically.

terms. "I come to offer Jerome a future, wealth, a kingdom. What have you to offer these?" Betsy questioned, but her voice was weak. For the first time she began to feel that she was pitting only a feeble chance against a strong certainty.

Napoleon moved more closely towards her, as though to sear her understanding, an exile from his country, an exile, a dependent upon your father's bounty?" Betty shrank back in horror at the thought. She shook her head. "No—no!" A sob caught in her throat.

"Believe me, Mademoiselle, I am kind, I see the future—the future when the scales of infatuation will have fallen from his eyes, when the glamour of your romance has faded," Napoleon's words cut cruelly, but he continued. "How do you suppose he will support an existence of inaction, an exile from his family, his interests, his friends? Never! Never! His ambitions—and he is a man of honor and ambition—his longings, his disappointments will eat into your happiness and destroy him utterly, and the time will come when he will see in you only the hated cause of his downfall, for the chains that bind him to you are the very chains that will chafe his passion into bitter regret and hatred."

"Ah, no, no; he will always love me," Betsy swayed slightly, the words eating into her heart. She recognized, however, the truth in his statement, but a truth that she did not dare admit to herself.

"Do not deceive yourself, Mademoiselle," Napoleon broke into her thoughts with cruel coldness. "Does the prisoner love his chains?" he questioned.

"Chains!" Betsy's fighting spirit was roused. She became indignant. "I am not holding him against his will. She threw back her proud red head. "He—it is he who loves me as dearly as I—ask him." She motioned towards Jerome as though seeking help from another quarter when she realized that she was being defeated.

Napoleon ignored her gesture. "Jerome is—or was—a man of honor," he spoke quietly and with determination. "Do you suppose that if ever he sees his mistake—and now he must—he would acknowledge it to you? Could he now come to you and tell you that you are standing in the way of his career, his entire life's happiness? No! It is you who must make the supreme sacrifice."

"Oh, I cannot, I cannot! Sir, you are cruel. You know I cannot," Betsy's eyes filled with tears. She became only a woman pleading for her own happiness, for her own right to be and to exist through the man she loved. Gone was her hope of placating the Emperor. Gone were her ambitions to become a queen. All that remained was the desire to hold fast to the greatest thing in her world—love. "Jerome is all my life. I cannot give him up. I cannot," The hot tears fell from her lovely eyes. She bowed her head.

Napoleon stood with folded arms, impassive. He saw now that he was breaking down slowly but surely her resistance to his will, and he knew that once having conquered her he would have conquered the rebellious spirit of Jerome.

"Ah, but you will give him up, Mademoiselle." His voice was soft, without the hint of a command; it calmly smiled, it trembled at the corners of his mouth.

"You will give him up, for I recognize in you the spirit of true devotion. You are not the woman to debase the object of your love. You yourself realize that you would cause him the greatest unhappiness, and because of this realization you will do anything in your power to make him see the error of his ways. You would not so belittle yourself as to force him into an unpleasant situation—a situation to which you hold the key."

"But—but he would not—he would not consent even if I should. Ah, no, no; I will not! I cannot! Truly I cannot!" Her voice was choked with sobs. She was weeping openly now, uncontrollably. "I cannot let him go. I love him with all my heart. I would do anything for him." But her own words had convicted her and placed her in the Emperor's power.

"You say you would do anything for him?" Napoleon came nearer and nearer, speaking slowly and in a low tone of voice. "Then, Mademoiselle, if you would do anything for him, as you say, you will send him to me loosed from all bondage."

"Oh, you don't understand, you can't understand," she sobbed. "I will not hold him against his will, ever. If he wants to go I give him free leave, but I cannot send him away from me. Only let me be near him, be some place where I can see him. You are too strong, too powerful, and I—I," she admitted, "have lost."

"My child!" Napoleon's voice was kind, but he spoke in the tones of a soldier. "There are some battles in which it is nobler to lose than to win."

"Ah, but Sir, you have never fought such a one." She looked up at him pathetically, as though asking respite from this torment, begging him for even the slightest mercy. "You have always been the victor. You do not know—you do not know the suffering of loss and defeat. And now—now he would never consent to leave me. You do not know, you cannot realize how—how very much he loves me."

Napoleon paused. "And so then," he began finally, "you must tell him it is only for a time. You must make him understand that his absence from you will be one of short duration."

"Oh, Sir, then it will not be forever!" Betsy exclaimed, her face transfigured with joy. She thought she saw the glimmerings of hope held out to her. She had not utterly lost after all. Her despair changed to happiness. She raised her head, smiling through her tears. But Napoleon's next words shattered her with a single blow.

"I will not deceive you, Mademoiselle," he said, not unkindly, "but Jerome shall never again leave France. Immediately upon completion of these plans Jerome will be crowned King of Westphalia."

"Oh!" Betsy clutched at her throat as though the pain inflicted by these words were too much for her to bear. The very thought of giving him over to another woman who would never, she was certain, love him as she did, was a crushing blow. Yet what could she do—what could she say? She had no hold over him save her love. And she knew now that she could not win Napoleon with only that. She had played all her cards. There was but one thing to do—to stand up strong under the blow. She dried the tears from her eyes and faced the Emperor as courageously as he faced a battle.

"Ah, you are brave," Napoleon complimented her, noting her change in manner. "You are a true soldier." But in saying that he paid her the greatest tribute in his power for he was not considering her now as a woman, but as one of his own men who went forth to face life or death without consideration.

Back in His Old Home Town

One Official's Temperance Week Follows Wine Fair of Another

Belgrade, Yugoslavia (AP)—"Drink all you can hold," says the minister of agriculture.

"Be temperate; go slow," says the minister of national health.

These are the slogans which headline the diametrically opposed campaigns of two of the most important government ministers. The minister of agriculture believes that greater consumption of liquor will help agriculture. His colleague believes that less consumption will aid public health.

The views of the government officials have just been given open expression in an amusing manner.

The minister of agriculture supported an exhibition of wines here, nectars from all parts of Yugoslavia being on display. Heavy, sweet Dalmatian wines, light, heavy wines from Fruška Gora, clear amber liquids from Smederevo, and glowing, ruby reds from the Juppa district, competed with one another.

Visitors to the exhibition, on payment of ten dinars, or 20 cents, could sample as many of the wines as they thought they could hold.

The first meeting of the national parliament since Easter was specially adjourned to enable the members to make a ceremonial visit to the exhibition. Next day the exhibition was closed, with a rumor that the members of parliament had exhausted its stocks.

The minister of health, however, was not to be outdone. He immediately organized a "temperance week" in Belgrade. Great meetings were held under the auspices of the ministry of national health.

Newspapers are now suggesting that the two ministers should settle their little difficulties over a glass of the national beverage, a peculiarly strong variety of plum brandy known as "rakija."

MOURN DEATH OF AGED SAILOR

Bermuda Was Home of Man Who Followed Sea For More Than Half Century.

St. Georges, Bermuda.—(AP)—Curious and furnishings gathered from every port in the world filled the coral stone cottage of Robert Francis Fox, who spent more than 50 of his 86 years of life before the mast.

He built it 20 years ago on St. David's island where he was born and where from distant lands he would send rare old pieces of furniture, pottery, glassware and odd things that he picked up on merchant voyages or whaling trips.

Fox died here recently, one of the most celebrated characters of these islands. He took to the sea as a lad of thirteen on one of the whalers then operating from Bermuda and "the wheel's kick and the wind's song and the white sails shaking" were his life for half a century. When he settled down in his coral home, he became a

Italians Resent Viennese Humor

Vienna.—(AP)—Unofficial protests were made by Italy on the occasion of the production of a new operetta entitled "Czarevitch" by Franz Lehár, in which a humorous Neapolitan character named Dodolo is made to say objectionable, non-sensical things offensive to Italians.

Several Italian journalists who attended the opening performance rose in unison when Dodolo appeared and walked out of the theatre. The Viennese press supports their indignant protest and says the offending passages should be deleted from the play.

The Odd Nine of Gettysburg had little trouble in defeating the Greenmount Athletic club on Sunday in a game played at Emmitsburg, the final score reading 15-3.

The locals scored in every inning but the ninth, pounding L. Kennell off the mound and giving Sadler some rough bumps, who had poor support. Kuhn pitched well for the victors, whiffing eleven and not issuing a pass. Roddy and Poulson supplied the fielding features.

The simple days are gone

Administering a will is a professional task which is becoming annually more involved and complex. The simple days are gone when a wife or relative of good business ability could fulfill the duties of an executor safely and efficiently. The work requires specialized experience, a wide variety of talents, broad financial facilities, alert judgment, prompt and skillful action and a trained knowledge of procedure.

Perhaps nowhere are the services of a responsible trust organization of so far reaching and well recognized value as in acting as executor of wills. When it is desirable to bring the intimate and special knowledge of your wife, or some relative to bear on the administration of your will, this can be accomplished by naming both the individual and the First National Bank as co-executors.

The matter of your will and its executor is of immediate and genuine importance. You are invited to come in and discuss it with our Trust Officer this week.

New Election Districts.—Two new districts have been created in this county—one that part of Mountpleasant township lying west and south of a public road leading from Dellone's mill to the farm formerly occupied by George Lashell's, on the York and Gettysburg turnpike road—elections to be held at Samuel Swope's in Bon-aughtown; the other, the township of Reading—elections to be held at the public school house in Hamp-ton.

At an election held on Wednes-day last, for officers of the Gettysburg and Black's Tavern turnpike company, the following persons were chosen:

President—Samuel Sloan.
Managers—James Bleakley, James Bell, Abraham Mumma, Michael Crowl, Peter Comfort, David Fogelsong.
Treasurer—Joseph Wilson.

The African Colony.—The last number of the African Repository contains some further details of information from Liberia, brought by the last arrival. It appears that three vessels with two hundred and ninety-three passengers in all had arrived at Liberia in safety.

The emigrants from South Carolina had enjoyed universal and perfect health. Those who came from the states north of Virginia had however suffered and twenty-four of them had died. "Draw a line," says Mr. Ashman, "due east and west across the Elk Ridge in Maryland, and not a death has invaded the people south of it." A new settlement at the head of navigation on the St. Paul's has been formed in a fine and fertile country which lies as a sort of barrier between the tribes of the coast and those of the interior and which was, therefore, obtained on easy terms. A large log factory has been erected, with a range of thirty or forty houses, and the settlement has been named "Millsburg."

Harrisburg, June 27.
Alarming Fire.—At three o'clock on Wednesday morning last, the citizens of Harrisburg were alarmed by the appalling cry of FIRE! It broke out in a tailor shop occu-piated by Mr. Geety, in Market Square, and before it could be arrested, entirely consumed the whole range of buildings, extending from the house occupied by Mr. Slough to Market Square. The principal sufferers are Messrs. Wyeth, Wolf, Capp and Wormley. The latter is in moderate circumstances and has thus, by an awful dispensation, been rendered almost destitute of a home. The different fire companies repaired to the scene of conflagration with an alacrity, which reflects much credit upon them; and to them and to the interposition of Providence, the northern section of the town owes its preservation. There was a dead calm, not a leaf stirred during the whole time.

$40 Reward.—On Tuesday, the 10th of June, inst., a certain man, by profession a shoemaker, who calls himself Jacob Martin, hired from the subscriber a gig and mare, for the purpose as he said of visiting a relation near Shippensburg, and was to have returned the day following—but has made his escape. He is about five feet, 6 or 8 inches in height, 28 or 30 years of age, slow of speech and of dark complexion, with dark hair, had on a black cloth coat half worn. The gig was entirely new, except the hubs—lined with drab cloth, and the top with yellow—the body cream color. The mare was a dark brown, five or six years old, stout and about 14 or 15 hands high, blind of the right eye—has a lump on the left leg below the knee. When rode she paces, but in harness, trots well. Whoever takes up and secures said Martin and returns the gig and mare to the subscriber shall receive the above reward. John Peck, Carlisle.

SEVENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO
More Hot Weather.—Wednesday and Thursday last were decidedly the hottest days of the season, and for many years. On Wednesday the mercury rose to 99 degrees and on Thursday about the same. On the latter day, the mercury ranged from 92 degrees to 98 degrees, during the greater part of the day—and was at 92 degrees at 9 o'clock p. m.

Gettysburg Railroad.—On Monday last an election took place at the courthouse in Gettysburg, for officers of the railroad which resulted in the choice of the following individuals. They are active, energetic men, and we have no doubt will, as soon as possible, take measures to push forward the enterprise.

President—Robert McCurdy.

The Postoffice.—On the 1st inst., William Gillespie, Esq., entered upon his duties as postmaster of this place. We doubt not he will prove a faithful and accommodating officer. Of the retiring postmaster, Mr. Buehler, we have already spoken; but we cannot refrain from remarking that, for faithfulness in duty, promptness and efficiency, and for accommodating disposition, few towns have been more favored in their postmaster than Gettysburg has been in the last four years—and we believe there is a universal feeling of regret that circumstances could not

ON THE LAST DAY

With one more day to live, and only one
I wonder what great task I'd work upon.
Granted full strength for those fast fleeting hours
I wonder on what deeds I'd spend my powers.

The fancy comes that I should run to see
The countless friends who have been kind to me,
And I should pause the while I rushed along
To beg another's pardon for some wrong.

I think I'd waste no time on selfish deeds;
But only labor for my spirit's needs.
As one about to journey far away
Goodbye to all I've known I'd want to say.
I'd have no vain illusions then of fame,
I'd see how cheap are things men strive to claim.
For that last day allowed on earth to me,
I'd be the man I've often wished to be.

Dog Hill Paragrafts

Poke Hazley has moved to a house near the Dog Hill church, but he is not satisfied with the location, as it is too near a graveyard and too far from a doctor.

have been such as to allow his retention in office. It appears now, however, to be a settled principle, that "to the victors belong the spoils"—and no one should find fault with those who have the power, that they should fill the offices with their friends. We hope to find in the successor of Mr. B. an equally efficient and accommodating officer.

Speed.—A fast train on the Pennsylvania railroad, when near Greensburg, lately, it is said, ran ten miles in seven and a half minutes, which is at the rate of eighty miles an hour.

(Ad.) Dedication of Three Churches.—St. Mary's (German) church, in York, will be dedicated to the service of God on the 24th inst.; St. Joseph's in Dallastown, York county, on the 25th inst., and St. Francis Xavier's in Gettysburg on the 31st inst.—by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Newman, Bishop of Philadelphia, who will preach in the first two places above mentioned in German, and in the last also in English, and on the same occasion also administer the holy sacrament of Confirmation.

The collection will be applied to defray the expenses of these new churches.

Little Jack Rabbit

One day as Little Jack Rabbit was hopping over the Sunny Meadow, his knapsack bouncing up and down on his back and his red-striped candy cane swinging from his left paw, he suddenly made a wish right out loud. Yes, he did, the funny little bunny.

"I wish I could climb a tree like Squirrel Nutcracker," sighed the little rabbit, as he stopped beneath a big cherry tree that grew close beside the Old Rail Fence. "I wish I could climb that cherry tree and get a lot of those lovely, ripe cherries to take home to mother for a cherry pie. Oh, me, Oh, my!" and looking wistfully up in the tree, the little rabbit scratched his car with his left hind foot.

"What's the matter?" all of a sudden asked a voice, and there stood the Circus Elephant. "Want a cherry, Bunnikins?" and reaching up into the tree with his big, long trunk, the kind old animal picked enough cherries in five minutes to fill the little rabbit's knapsack. Yes, sir, more than enough to fill the knapsack—a capful besides, and lifting the little bunny up on his back, the old elephant started off for the dear Old Bramble Patch.

Well, sir! As soon as Lady Love, the little bunny's mother, who was sitting on the front porch mending holes in the little rabbit's stockings, saw all those lovely cherries, she started off right away to make dough for a cherry pie. "And you must stay and have some of the pie," she said to the old elephant.

"Ha, ha, ha!" cried the Elephant big,
"I can eat more pie than a hungry pig.
There's nothing so good as cherry pie
To make one feel young and frisky and spry."

Goodness me! That old circus animal can spout poetry just like Bill Shakespeare.

Pretty soon the Elephant and the little rabbit began to play jack stones on the porch steps, and

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

A MAGNIFICENT FAILURE

IN the year 1853 Anna van Gogh gave birth to a boy who was given the name Vincent Willem. He was a sturdy lad, inheriting the rugged characteristics from a long line of fine and noble people. But from his mother this boy drew most of his lovable and beautiful traits.

As a child he was little understood—and as a man he was little appreciated—except by that always diminutive and understanding few.

But the little chap loved flowers and animals and made all sorts of collections. He wandered in the cornfields and meadows and devoted long days to thought and meditation. As a boy of eight he made a clay model of an elephant—but destroyed it quickly when people began to praise it.

His childhood, nevertheless, was one full of the love of natural poetry. He was always observant. His eyes were always searching. They pierced the very ground. And his feeling was often buried in the very throat of the bird that sang before him during his tramps through the fields.

An early disappointment in love seemed to have changed his entire career, and at the age of 23 van Gogh was out of employment, despondent and full of shadow. He worked in a relative's art shop, did some drawing, and for a time tried teaching. He craved beauty. They tried to make a minister out of him—but this failed. He didn't like to be guided. He wanted to work out his own salvation in his own way. This is always a difficult path for anyone—though the way of the great.

He went through great privations, but kept drawing. One day he wrote home: "In a picture I wish to say something that would console as music does." Light began to dawn. His first noticed sketches were those of miners among whom he worked. He loved Millet, because Millet loved nature and the true in nature.

Again van Gogh loved—only again to be disappointed. Thereafter he lavished his big heart upon the unworthy and trod the winneps of discouragement and poverty. But he had a brother who understood and loved him and it is the two volumes of letters to him, which have recently been published, that I have been reading—the story of a magnificent failure—for only now does the world know that when Vincent van Gogh died, a great lover of beauty, a man with a tender soul, and a true artist slipped into the Great Silence.

In one of the letters to his brother Theo, I find this line: "I am daily more convinced that people, who do not in the first place wrestle with nature, never succeed."

I doubt, whether in all published literature there are greater, more poignant letters than those penned by Vincent to his brother Theo—letters alone which are sure to grant this lonely unhappy genius—immortality.

BODY OF MAIL PILOT IS FOUND

Flier With Perfect Record In Air Service Victim Of Crash.

Elsinore, Mo., July 2.—(AP)—The body of Leslie H. Smith, air-mail pilot, missing since last Thursday night when he set out from Little Rock for St. Louis with news photographs of the Democratic convention at Houston, was found beside his plane about five miles north of here yesterday by an 11-year-old farmer boy.

On Smith's back was strapped his parachute, with the release untouched, indicating the crash had come suddenly and left him unprepared for the leap.

Twenty airplanes and the army dirigible C-53 had scoured the region Saturday, but stormy conditions and low visibility handicapped their search. A farmer had reported seeing a pilot working over his plane near Mills Springs and Smith's plane had been heard over Hunter, Mo., on Thursday night.

HICKMAN MAULS HIS CELLMATE

Condemned Slayers Have Hand-to-Hand Combat; Refuse to Give Reason.

San Quentin Prison, July 2.—Locked in mortal combat in their cell in "condemned row," William Edward Hickman, kidnaper-slayer of little Marian Parker, of Los Angeles, and Joseph Troche, a condemned murderer from Eldorado county, aroused the other inmates of the death house to a frenzy during the early hours of Sunday morning.

While the yells of the combatants and the other condemned men rang through the death house, guards struggled frantically with the three heavy locks on the cell door.

Hickman in a frenzy of rage was astride of his battered and bruised cell mate. He had ripped the leg from a small wooden stool and was battering Troche over the head with the weapon.

Troche was bleeding and almost unconscious when the guards succeeded in separating the two. He was taken to the prison hospital for treatment but steadfastly refused to disclose what the battle was about.

Hickman Sullen and Silent Hickman, equally reticent over the cause of the fight, was locked up in his cell alone. He had but few marks upon him and lapsed into sullen silence.

Prison officials reluctantly admitted that the battle had taken place but professed ignorance as to its cause. It was explained that Hickman and Troche have been cell mates for about two months and seemed to get along well together. They were placed together at their own request prison officials said.

Boris Too Busy Ruling To Get Married, He Says

Sofia (AP)—King Boris of Bulgaria is the only monarch in the world who has never had a love affair. This explains why today, at 34, he is the only bachelor king in Europe.

The lonely young sovereign's life has been so ordered, from youth to maturity, that he has had little opportunity to cultivate the society of women. His autocratic father, the deposed Czar Ferdinand, who now lives in Coburg, denied him all diversions in order to train him for the duties of the throne. And the last fifteen years of his life have been so occupied by the World War and the duties of ruling the country that his social life has been neglected.

"I am too busy putting Bulgaria's house in order to get married," said the genial democratic ruler laughingly when the Associated Press correspondent called on him recently.

"Besides," he added, "Bulgaria is too poor at the moment to afford a queen. When we get on our feet I shall be prepared to embark on the sea of matrimony. We must first make sure that the throne is strong enough to 'support' two."

When the correspondent asked if there was any likelihood he would plight his troth with Princess Giovanna, 22-year-old daughter of King Victor Emmanuel III of Italy, Boris smiled and said evasively. "You see, in Bulgaria there is a custom that the sons in a family shall first get their sisters married off before they themselves take brides. As I still have my sister Eudoxia on my hands, the question of my own wedlock must wait."

King Boris is as democratic as his father was autocratic. His charming simplicity, gentle nature, buoyant enthusiasm and unblemished character have made him the idol of the Bulgarian people. Where his severe father commanded the respect and fear of the people, Boris has won their love.

He may be seen any day driving his American-built automobile through the towns of Bulgaria, where he is as well known for his daredevil speed as the Prince of Wales is noted for his bold horsemanship. Boris knows every inch of his little kingdom. Every one of Bulgaria's six million peasants is on speaking terms with the king, whom they call their "Little Father." Unannounced he frequently turns up on their farms in an American golf suit and cap and discusses their problems with them.

Although King Boris in another few months will have been on the throne ten years, he has never been formally crowned. This is due to the poverty of the country, which the peace treaties left dismembered and bankrupt.

"I suppose the coronation will take place," said the modest potentate to the correspondent, "only when a queen shares the throne with me. But until we restore the prosperity of the country both my wedding and coronation must be deferred."

In spite of the fact that he has palaces at Sofia, Vrania, Euxinograd and Sitnyakovo, the bachelor king lives a very uneventful and modest existence. He is undoubtedly the loneliest sovereign in the world. The only time he entertains is when he gives the customary royal receptions to government officials and the diplomatic corps.

Intelligent, hard-working and intensely earnest, King Boris received a sound education, which he owed chiefly to his mother, the Princess Marie Louise of Bourbon-Parma, beloved by her people for her goodness and gentle character, who died in 1899. Boris graduated from the Sofia Military academy and fought with gallantry in the Balkan war of 1912 and in the World War, in which, entering with the rank of major, he emerged as a full general. When only 24 he replaced his father on the Bulgarian throne.

To American visitors King Boris shows marked cordiality and friendship. When the Associated Press correspondent arrived in Sofia the king dispatched one of his American automobiles with his secretary to the hotel to bring the correspondent to the royal palace at Vrania, just outside Sofia.

"How do you do? I am glad to see you again," said the youthful monarch in perfect English as he walked down the long graveled path to the gate of the palace grounds to greet the American visitor. Then, introducing his sister, he took the correspondent on a walk through the beautiful royal gardens, Princess Eudoxia joining in the conversation.

Displaying intense pride in the magnificent flowers, ferns and trees in the royal grounds, most of which he planted himself—for Boris is a distinguished naturalist—the king next showed his American visitor through the palace buildings. One of these is a full fledged menagerie, where the king's pets are three giant Indian elephants, which he feeds himself every day. He is a great lover of all animals.

Transcending all the interesting exhibits at the royal palace, however, is a miniature locomotive of 10 horsepower which Charles R. Crane of Chicago, presented to the king for his birthday.

"I love to tinker with machinery," said Boris. "My hobbies are driving locomotives and automobiles. Everything of a mechanical nature interests me. I suppose that is why Mr. Crane gave me this engine, which is a model of a very famous high-powered American locomotive."

That a grown-up sovereign can have toys just as much as children was observed by the correspondent when the king gave him a ride in his narrow-gauge Decauville railway which encircles the palace grounds. The king, during his few leisure moments, plays with the miniature locomotives, coaches and freight cars forming the equipment of his railroad with as much joy and enthusiasm as an American boy finds in toying with a "scooter."

Sitting at the tea table in the palace, the dark-haired, unsophisticated, lean-visaged sovereign, dressed in simple dark sack suit and sombre tie, resembled an American theological student rather than a reigning monarch. His face radiates spirituality and kindness. In the next room, mouldering from want of use, were the king's golden throne and crown jewels. As a matter of fact, the king feels more at home with an ordinary sheepskin cap and walking stick than a jeweled crown or a golden scepter.
